Winter, wine, and all that jazz

Link|Comments (0) Posted by David Lyon January 20, 2011 11:15 AM

When we wrote about the pleasures of Long Island's wine country last August, we couldn't imagine anything more delightful than sitting beneath a leafy pergola sipping a glass of wine and watching sunset over the vineyards. It turns out that Long Island has figured out a winter answer to that summer idyll: the Long Island Winterfest. On six weekends from February 12 through March 20, you can catch jazz concerts in winery tasting rooms (among other venues) as part of the Jazz on the Vine series. Several hotels and B&Bs are also slashing prices for the winter. Complete details will be available soon on the web site, LIWinterfest.com.
